Reading the witty, warm and wise personal essays in Emotional Rescue reminds me that there may be no better soundtrack for success or medicine for loneliness than pop music. Songs for break-ups, songs for loss, songs for good days and bad: often the stuff we play through our headphones is a way of pairing our pain and pleasure with the words and music of an artist, comforting ourselves with ...

The true love requires that it ought not to be conditional. Love should flow out of compassion for other person. Our heart ought to generate a feeling of love and concern. Love in the pure form means giving without expecting anything in return. This is true love. When mother loves children, it is unconditional and is pure in nature.

As a listener of all types of music, I was initially excited about this non-fiction essays centered around music and life's great emotions. Sadly Greenman's Emotional Rescue falls short of expectations--by sprinkling both personal events and song lyrics into one book, he fails to delve into either deeply.
