Giovanni Rucellai, a major patron of art and architecture in fifteenth-century Florence, paid Leon Battista Alberti to construct the Palazzo Rucellai and the façade of Santa Maria Novella, both high - profile and extremely costly undertakings. In his personal memoir, he talks about his motivations for these and other commissions, noting that "All the above-mentioned things have given and give me the greatest satisfaction and pleasure, because in part they serve the honor of God as well ...
